

November 21, 2007

To Whom It May Concern:

I have known Dr. Jeanne King for the past forty-three years. We grew up together in New Orleans, Louisiana and attended the same school from the fifth through the twelfth grades. After graduating from high school, we went off to college our separate ways but maintained contact throughout the years. She became a psychologist while I became a teacher, then, an intelligent analyst with the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, and finally a court interpreter. It was working as an intelligence analyst that I reconnected with Dr. King while I was attending a conference on Missing Children in Chicago.

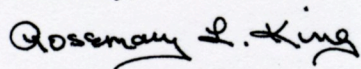

Dr. King was always at the top of her class in both high school and in college. She continued this determination and dedication to excellence once she entered the business world. She has always been devoted to both her children and her patients and has always committed to strive for excellence in both the rearing of her children as well as the treatment of her clients. While the direction of her career has changed only slightly in direction, the commitment and determination are still there to provide a service for making the quality of life better for mothers, children, and families in crisis. This is a cause that she is devoted to one-hundred percent.

It is through Dr. King's own personal experiences that she is able to connect and identify with those who are in crisis. She can quickly identify a person who is abused or abusing, and can put these people on the right track for getting the help they so desperately need. She has created a program to help others within the medical and healthcare fields to recognize these people, the risks they face, and possible solutions to bring them peace and continue life in a non-threatening environment.

Dr. King has shared her program throughout the country trying to reach as many people as she can, health professionals as well as victims alike. Partners in Prevention grew out of this dedication to share and teach the skills necessary for health professionals working with domestic violence victims including nurses, doctors, psychologists, and therapists. Thus they will be better equipped to help the victims begin the healing process that faces them.

Dr. King is very serious about her commitment to her work and about making a difference in the lives of thousands. She makes it easy for those who know her well to support her in this effort.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in cursive script that reads "Rosemary L. King".

Rosemary L. King,
Board Member for Partners in Prevention
(Not related to Dr. Jeanne King)